TYNAN ON MAILER

"No matter how sternly one quarrels with what he says, Mailer has the power—shared by some saints, many suicides, and most first-rate writers—of renovating and replenishing the imagination. Some day—and the sooner the better—he may return to the frame of mind in which he said:

> " 'As Socialists, we want a socialist world not because we have the conceit that men would therefore be happy . . . but because we feel the moral imperative in life itself to raise the human condition, even if this should ultimately mean no more than that man's suffering has been lifted to a higher level.'

"Meanwhile read the book.* Nobody writing in America cares so deeply about so many things, personal and political, vital and various."—Kenneth Tynan in The Village Voice.
